WHAT MUSIC MEANS TO ME

(Maplewood Institute Prize Essay)

IN the land of living reality are the cares, sorrows and anxieties coexistent with life in its fullest sense. Trouble is our heritage. Obnoxious though it may be, we must accept it none-the-less. From our earliest childhood, as far back as we can remember, none of us can say that even one day has been without its special grief, be that grief big or little. So each one of us, seeking rest from the strife of the work-a-day world, indulges in some form of relaxation. Music provides this relaxation for me and for all music-lovers the world over. Personally, it has always superseded every other attraction offered me even during the "scale" days with their arduous "one-two-three-under-four-five-six-seven-eight." This fascination has grown, if possible, with the years. For with advancing age came a fuller understanding and appreciation of good music and the resultant enjoyment thereof. To me, music is now an "Open Sesame" to a mystical land of whose existence I formerly had not the least suspicion—a spiritual land where I feel a measure of sublime happiness and contentment which, being but a poor mortal, I can only sense in a vague, incomplete way.

Music has as many enchanting phases as a rainbow. In fact, it might well be likened to a rainbow, for it ranges colorfully from the gayest of melodies, like a flitting ray of golden sunshine, to the most somber of tunes which seem to cover all listeners with a black pall of gloom. And each bit of changing harmony seems more desirable than the last.

Music appeals to me for two main reasons.

First, because it is a real friend. It will be in accord with any mood which happens to seize me. Perhaps I feel cross and temperamental. At such a time solemn music, with the deep, rumbling tones of the 'cello surmounting other musical instruments, with its monotonous undertone, soothes me with its very monotony. Then the plaintive note of the viola adds a step of quietude to the firm foundation of monotony, and slowly but surely, with rising spirit and quickening tempo, the music builds me up until I again feel in concord with the world about me. At another time, perhaps, I have mounted the pinnacle of happiness. It is then that the music surges around me, its gay, lilting refrain rising and falling like effervescent bubbles.

But when a peaceful, mystic mood descends upon me, how indescribably beautiful the music becomes! It sprays about me with a tinkling quality, as though tossed from a fountain of the gods. Figuratively speaking, it glitters, like slender, white moonbeams piercing an elfin lake with darts of pure silver. It touches my spirit as tenderly as the skilled musician with caressing, sensitive fingers touches his harp. It dances its rhythmical way to my heart—a beloved friend indeed!

The second reason why music means so much to me is entirely different. A very wise man once said that in every masterpiece there dwelt apart, some little portion of the author himself. And more and more I see the truth in this assertion. If I listen carefully to any famous composition, I find in the core, in the very heart of the piece, the idea which first inspired it. Even the flightiest caprice holds a thought which comes, all unconsciously perhaps, straight from the writer's deepest heart.

Thus has music endeared itself to me for the selfsame reasons that it has endeared itself to others. It is almost real and tangible to those who love it. It lifts the heavy burdens which weigh down our spirits. It answers the blind groping of each one of us; it is the light which makes bright our gloomy way. It brings to our careworn hearts a thoughtful tranquillity which grows into a slowly-mounting exaltation of spirit. And I love it, for each sonorous melody and each light air holds a thought which hovers fleetingly above the music—a thought as pure and as transcendently beautiful as a stainless soul.

Margaret Murray

FAREWELL ADDRESS

TWO and one half years ago there entered into Pittsfield High School a class of two hundred and fifty meek and humble sophomores. To such an unsophisticated group the spaciousness of the magnificent, new edifice, and the countenances of the venerable sages therein, were a bit awe-inspiring. We felt like "babes in the woods,"—the prey of the "big bad wolf" teachers. In a certain sense our fears have been only too well realized. We have been forced to waste our valuable time in pondering over "golden" mastery problems, or to rack our brains in attempting to digest Cicero's orations. You big-hearted teachers have also justified our fears by presenting us with deficiencies, or fives on our report cards as tokens of your appreciation of our mental ability.

But time and experience have mellowed our feelings. You have not treated us as, "just another class," but you have taken a genuine interest in our affairs. As example, I understand that one of our instructors has not missed a Junior Prom in forty-five years. Only last week you entertained us by scampering around the bases while handing a licking to the varsity nine. You have endeavored to make our education our apprenticeship of life. During our youth you have striven to strengthen our character so that we may be able to meet with a grin the trials of later life.

Now that the time to say goodbye has arrived, we realize that you have been not only our teachers but our friends. We now know that you have not been "big bad wolf" teachers, but have been friends to guide us through the mazes of education. It is our sincerest hope that in later life we find as good friends as you have been. Members of the faculty, it is with deepest regret that we bid you, Farewell!

THOUGHTS OF A SENIOR ON GRADUATING FROM HIGH SCHOOL

AS the time for our leaving this place of learning draws near, we, as seniors, more and more begin to turn our thoughts back to the last three years. To most of us these years have flown by on swift wings—at times, it seems they have passed almost too swiftly. Each of them was filled to the brim with happy incidents—those trivial happenings which in all probability will remain in our memories longer than all the knowledge which we have so earnestly tried to absorb. As budding sophomores we remember our first days in this new building, our thrills at being the first students to enter the new High School, and our dismay as we surveyed the stacks of books which we had to take home each night. Then as we became dignified juniors we put aside these childish thoughts. Many turned their attention to the opposite sex, and, from that time on, they have kept it there. Without a doubt this remarkable situation is due to the fact that, although beautiful girls are usually very rarely seen, our class is overwhelmed with them. At last, as we finally reached the high state of sophisticated seniors, we entered upon that very difficult task of setting an example for the rest of the school. To be sure, often we suffered a short lapse of memory and forgot our stately duty—those times when we simply could not get our homework done; when we could not resist the pleasure of annoying study hall teachers with peculiar, mischievous noises, emanating from the rear of the room; and when we so slyly tried to smuggle dainties from the cafeteria, usually with little success—but such forgetfulness has been known to afflict even the most subdued of men.

Certainly as we look back over the path we have traveled, we can never forget those members of the faculty who have guided our footsteps during the last years. Within this time we have become acquainted with each of them. Their faults and their virtues have all been discovered and without doubt the opposite is true. Each has done his best to mold and shape our paths, and to teach us the beauties of knowledge—a seemingly hopeless task.

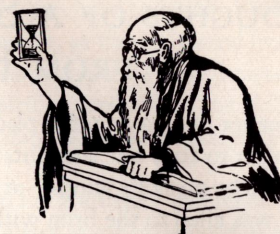

These recollections which perhaps seem so trivial to you sophomores and juniors, will never be forgotten. In three brief years we have climbed laboriously from the bottom of the hill to the top. With this transition childish habits have been for the greater part discarded, and in their place, let us hope, more mature traits have taken root. Some of us have succeeded, some have not; yet we have all in a measure done our best. A coveted point in the course of our life has been reached. Now we are ready to embark on the sea of life, ready to steer our ship through the world. Before us lies a sea of blackness, behind us a rainbow of remembrance. Forth onto the dark water lies our course. A few will ultimately reach the farther side and achieve greater triumphs; many will lose their course and wander forever in an unknown ocean; while a few will be blown back to the starting point. Yet no matter what may happen in the future, all of us will forever hold these last three years deep in our hearts.

But things begin and things do end,
The class of 1934 is ended,
Little is left but the luxury of a regret
For the pleasures that each day attended.

Three years have swiftly passed away,
And as graduates at last,
Upon the glittering board of life
We wait our dice to cast.

Stanley S. Carpenter '34

CLASS PROPHECY

HISTORY repeats itself. In 1960 as the World's Fair again opened at Chicago, I was determined to view the miracles of the modern era. Gathering a few belongings and my family into my rocket plane I started off toward the "Playground of America." We arrived at the Chicago airport in about three hours and after leaving my family at the Enchanted Island for little children, I decided to look around at my new surroundings. I wandered here and there among the buildings, being bumped by the hurrying crowd, until finally I came upon the Hall of Science, the one and only building I had really come to see.

I had heard that a great American scientist was to give free rides to Mars on his soaring rockets and I wanted to see the proceedings. In my excitement I stumbled over some apparatus and fell through the office door of the scientist. I looked up, and whom should I see but James Winter, a former classmate of mine, who informed me that it was he, together with his colleagues Majic Potsaid, Edward Sheldon, and Spencer Stolberg, who made it possible for the universe to enjoy a trip to Mars.

As we were discussing old times, I heard a terrific racket outside. Running to the window, I found that it was Donald Zink who acted as announcer for the lines of rocket ships. At this time James offered to take me on the next trip to Mars. Accepting the invitation, I entered the rocket ship. Here I saw Ritamae Stephenson, Jeannie Millett and James Decker acting as hostesses for the journey. All the passengers were gathered on board among whom I recognized Helen Jeffries, George Smith, Isabel Rainka, Alma Williams, Sally Trczinka, Paul Thrane, Janeth Ford, and Beatrice Poulin. To my utter amazement I saw Charles Sloper as the chief pilot of the rocket ship and Edward Wood as his first mate.

No sooner had we gotten under way than the sweet, melodious strains of a waltz floated to our ears. The music was rendered by Louis Boos' universally famous orchestra featuring the celebrated clarinet player, Helen Pagerey; the well-known flute player, Edmay Vienneau, and the renowned violin trio consisting of Beatrice Rappaport, Bernadine Olds, and Winnifred Taylor accompanied by the now famous John Szymanski, pianist. Between dances we were served with Dorothy Quirk's famous fudge and graham cracker pie.

After an otherwise uneventful journey we landed at Carpenter's Field dedicated to Stanley Carpenter for his bravery in blazing the first trail to Mars. We expected Mayor Sanford Bookless to welcome us; but as he was out peddling milk and cream with his assistant Isadore Goodman and Benjamin Borke, we were met by the City Council which was composed of Earl English, William Fahey, Ellen Freehan, Rita Flynn, and Thomas Stodden.

We were taken to their Municipal Hall designed by Edward McDermott who, at the summons of the Democratic Mayor of Pittsfield, Bruce Burnham, had left Mars in company with his assistants, Thomas Russo and Fred Arigoni to rebuild the City Hall which had been a landmark since 1832. As we were inspecting the building, Mayor Bookless arrived with a party of state inspectors, headed by Alexander Leslie, who took us with them on their inspection tour.

As we passed the main office we saw Beatrice Porter taking dictation from Josey Arnold. Peering around the bookkeeping machine we saw Dolores Heidel furiously pounding on the keys trying to get the right total. Outside the office, Grace Conroy and Rita Mara, two unemployed stenographers, were waiting for an interview with the employment manager, Arnold Liez. Continuing our inspection tour we bumped into Raymond Stevens serving in the capacity of office boy to defray his expenses at Robert Russell's Institute of Higher Learning which he had attended since 1950. As we passed the accounting department, we saw Harriet Arrowitz, Eileen Becker, Howard Harris, Gertrude Campbell, and Everett Horrigan trying to balance the budget.

At this time I remembered that I had neglected to send a stratospherogram to my folks back home. The Mayor offered me the use of his car and his chauffeur who I later found out to be none other than Isadore Ambrose. In a few minutes we reached the inter-planetary correspondence office where Francis Turner sent my message to Earth. Here I caught a glimpse of George Andrews and Paul Armstrong furiously pounding the keys in an effort to relay a message to the distant planet of Pluto of which Lena Rappaport was the First President.

On my way to the Blumendale Arms Hotel owned by the Joseph Blumendale, inter-planetary known financier, I bought the Daily Blah edited by John Rudin. I turned to the society page where I read of the weddings of Samuel Rue and Sally Noonan and of Edward Rushbrook and Catherine Cheyne. The ceremonies were performed by the Rev. Adolphe LeFebvre. Turning to the sports page, I read the account of the ensuing struggle between Henri Beauchemin and Joseph Eida against Edward Larkin and Dudley Head for the Mars doubles Ping-pong championship. Catherine Washburn, Viola Whitbeck, Robert Smith, and Mary Kelly were to officiate.

In the midst of my reading I was attracted by some scuffling in an alley. Upon investigation I found that it was Richard Stevenson thrashing Adolph Pike within an inch of his life for flirting with Dick's wife. Just then the police patrol drove up and Sam Shusterman, Kenneth Pike, and Leo Pharmer, officers of peace, intervened and escorted them to the "hoosegow" where Judge William Shephard confined them to a cell.

I soon reached the spacious hotel. Two bell boys stepped forth, took my baggage and escorted me to my room. They appeared familiar and upon closer examination I recognized them to be Willard Discoe and Francis Williams. My hotel maid, Doris Young, informed me that a party of women from Earth were stopping at the hotel some of them very prominent in politics on Earth. Included in this group were Rose Weiner, who was running for the vice presidency on the same ticket with Jack Bloch who was out for the presidency, Phyllis Barber, Secretary of Labor; and Jennie Zarcome, Marjorie Wilcox, Helen Casey, Pauline Cimini, and Josephine Zeimak.

Recognizing the names I immediately called upon the group and we went down to dinner together. Looking around I noticed Avis Tatro, Rita Conroy, Caroline Sottile, Emma Clay and Ann Carey who were representing an American Dress Syndicate. During dinner we were entertained by a musical comedy review consisting of Sara Brownell, Ethel Giguare, Mildred Cowlin, Mario D'Angelo, and Lynwood Aldam.

After dinner my friends and I decided to attend a carnival, operated by Elmer Lombard and Raymond Zuorski, featuring William Zarvis as the man on the flying trapeze; James Ryan as a dare devil diver who plunges from a height of 200 feet into 5 feet of water; Alfred Ferris, the lion tamer; Elizabeth Scape, a bareback rider; and the world's most humorous clowns including John Condron, Joseph Boison, Harry Allen, Ernest Roberts, and James Roy.

As soon as we entered the lot, we heard a humming voice, the owner of which I was determined to find. Going in the direction of the voice I saw none other than our silver-tongued orator, Harold Feldman, flamboyantly speling for our noted fan dancer, Daisy Smith. Side attractions to this show were supplied by Dorothy Walsh and Mary Noprava, creative dancers and Elizabeth Fyler, noted tap dancer. Selling tickets for this event were Edward Belland and David Blume.

I intended to stop and speak to Harold but my attention was drawn to a side attraction displaying three of the smallest women of Mars. As I walked up I recognized them to be three of my classmates, Annie Rogers, Anna Basanzelli, and Martha Ruscio posing for Warren Scafe's animal crackers. To think that I should visit a carnival sponsored by my classmates. But surprises were yet in store. I went to round a corner but I bumped into something. I looked up and saw nothing but a pair of legs. I craned my neck and looked into the smiling face of Wesley Baker on stilts who was working as a walking billboard for Richard Gilchrest the "make-to-order" tailor.

Of course, every carnival is incomplete without peanuts, and this one was no exception to the rule. I came upon two fighting peanut vendors and accosting them I recognized Jack Jampole and Walter Mahauski who were vying as to which one would perform Peter Skockensky's Russian Cossack Dance which had previously been done by Grace Lee, but who was unable to dance because of the measles. The argument was finally settled when Marguerite Lummus stepped forth and announced that she would be the substitute.

Nearby a crowd was assembling at one of the platforms. Approaching, I found I was just in time to see the selection of Miss Universe. Among the grey-haired judges were the honorable Charles Kidney, the illustrious George Malcolm, the distinguished Valentino Marchetto, and the eminent Frank Sherman. As the beauties paraded along the platform, I recognized Natalie Magnoly of Italy, Lois Fenton of the United States, Christine Manley of England, Muriel Kemp of Ireland, Jennie Pasek of Poland, Shirley Olson of Sweden, Bernice Vienneau of France, and Dorothy Brigham of Spain. Among the spectators was John Tobey who was to display Miss Universe in Donald Butler's Follies of 1961.

Finally our party decided to go to Thelma Johnson's Dance Palace. There we were entertained by Schuyler Goodrich and William McCulloch, two handsome gigolas imported from America by Thelma's employment manager, Helen Klose. To our delight we met another party of Earth women who had arrived on the second rocket ship from Chicago. Among them were Margaret Madden, U. S. Olympics Champion; Ruth Kearney, a professional golfer; Irene Laurin, who held the world's continual gum-chewing record; Ellen Jackson, world's champion woman home-run hitter; Lillian King, Professor of Agriculture; Nellie Miller, the foremost typist of the universe; Dorothy McDermott, renowned hair-dresser; and Jane Sclater, the fashion plate of seven planets. As we were discussing the good old days of 1934, James Dawson, a messenger from the rocket ship, informed me that we were to leave for Earth within the hour.

Bidding my friends farewell, I hastened to the airport, and having about fifty minutes to spare I visited the Pauline Bradway School for Girls which was nearby. There I met more of my old chums, Lubi Buksa was teaching law; Richard Connors, English; John Casey, shorthand; Claire Rocca, history; Rita Pilon, domestic science; and Ethel Phillipson, Latin. The dean, Anna Austin, informed me that John Barnini, a former college athlete was now head of the physical education department.

As I was about to inspect the gymnasium I heard the siren which meant that the ship was leaving in five minutes. Hastening to be on time, I bumped into Cynthia Barnes, Hilda Underwood, and Lenore Bilodeau, who were also trying to reach the same ship. They told me that they had purchased a satellite of Mars and were only going back to Earth to get their husbands and supplies. Just before we left, Alfred Bongini and Robert Brown brought me my baggage which I had forgotten at the hotel.

Soon we were on our way. While I was enjoying the comforts of the salon, a distinguished looking lady whom I had not previously noticed, approached me. To my utter astonishment and delight I found that it was Mildred Simmons, a former classmate. She told me that she, together with Rosemary Smith and Edith Sonsini had been keeping a record of the accomplishments of some of her classmates.

Here is a brief resume of what she imparted to me.

Elizabeth Tabor had made quite a name for herself in psychopathic circles by publishing a book entitled "Balanced Diets for Unbalanced People."

Mable Miller, Margaret Buckley, and Marguerite Kletchka because of their love of rural life, finally settled in the very sparsely populated district of Lanesboro. She said, however, that they are very popular with the "Hicks."

Doris Knight, Doris McLaughlin, Dorothy Counter, and Inez Craik obtained positions in a private school and there conducted a course in Rose Gruberg's modest methods of behavior.

Marion Gale became very popular at college where she had become basketball coach and when she returned from a trip to Europe even the tide was out to meet her.

Virginia Hill had attained the greatest peak of success by her ability to compose and sing torch songs.

Anna Carlson became famous through her ability as a writer. Her latest book, "How to Grow Slender without Dieting," has outsold many of the best sellers of former years.

Eleanor Breen and Shirley MacDonald spent so many years looking for the right vocation that they finally became discouraged and founded an employment bureau.

Viola Surowiec took a cargo of kangaroos from Australia to Newfoundland, crossed them with seals, and raised sealskin coats with pockets.

Marjorie Burrows and Rita Reagan made a fortune by discovering a use for the holes in stale doughnuts. They used them to stuff Macaroni.

Celia Calderilla and Iva Chase had given the best years of their life to the task of christianizing the natives of the upper Yan Zize River.

Margaret Rice became an archeologist of note, and discovered the answer to the riddle of the curse of King Tut's Tomb.

Having heard her interesting account, I related to her how some of the others had fared in life.

I told her that a canyon, rivaling the Grand Canyon in size, had been dug in Peru by John Adams who was still looking for the nickel he had lost in 1934.

Rosemary Cudahy, Rita Daniels, and Virginia DiCarlo, after some years experimenting in the field of the psychology of farming, devised a maze which was so hard they couldn't solve it themselves, and when I inquired they were spending their time cutting out paper dolls.

Sophia Koronchik and Anna Jablonski had been deported to Russia for having led a Communist demonstration in Hinsdale.

Bertha Dickinson, Gertrude Dowd, and Florence Duggan swam the Red Sea, and since then scientists have been greatly puzzled. It seems that the sea turned blue with disappointment at being conquered.

Lucie Hunt was giving cooking instructions over the radio. She was doing very well for several bridegrooms had written in and thanked her for her recipes.

Walter Mendel became a teacher of shorthand, but he soon grew tired of teaching the dead language as it lacked the human touch, so he became an undertaker.

Doris McCoy spent her time inventing and perfecting beauty preparations and treatments to occupy the spare time of Louise McEnany.

Miriam Levinson, Catherine Ryan, and Helen Senik had found positions for themselves in Virginia Musgrove's dairy farm.

Marie Murray, Antoinette Massimiano, and Julia Milukas had opened a shorthand school for enterprising high school students.

Suddenly we were interrupted by a porter announcing that we were arriving at our destination. Looking closely, I perceived that the porter was John Huska. In a few minutes I was back on the fair grounds breathing good old American air.

Determined to see all the interesting sights, I hired Thomas McNeil and James Martin to guide me to the various places of high repute. As we walked down the "Avenue of Flags," I noticed a few representatives from foreign countries standing beneath their respective flags. These were John Metallo of Italy, David Kidd of Scotland, Ann Denno of France, Dorothea Harrington of England, and Robert Buck of Holland.

The first building we entered was that of Donald Burness' Airplane Corporation. Among the chief demonstrators were Henry Hill and Ellen Gardner. The guides told me that I might be interested in seeing John Ferry and Haven Fagley assemble a plane in the record time of ten minutes; but as I was not interested in mechanics, I did not go but asked to be taken to Kathryn Cushing's Pattern Corporation where I saw Athalie Dakin, Grace Tillou, Louise Morey, and Alba Forni designing bathing suits for the Mary Minotti Bathing Suit Company.

Later they took me to see one of the special attractions of the fair—a milking contest. Russell Jordon, who had held the title of champion milker since 1938, was defending his crown against William Nicoll.

Passing by the merry-go-round, I felt the urge to be young once again and decided to take a ride on one of the horses. As I mounted my trusty steed, I saw Esther Green, Phyllis Haley, and Geneva Haskel just getting on with their families. Wheeling around on the merry-go-round I saw several familiar faces. Charlotte Coons and Catherine Creran were selling ice cream. Nearby, I saw Nicholas Melle and Owen Kelly proudly parading their blue ribbon Guernsey before the crowd. On an adjacent platform I saw Catherine Malloy, Eileen Maloney, and Catherine Mele dancing the Carioca for Clara Lindquist's studio of modern dancing. I also saw Kenneth Ritchie, who, always believing that there was an unlimited store of latent electricity beneath the earth's crust, was making plans to carry on an energetic programme of mining for the elusive energy called "watts."

The spirit of youth was now freely flowing through my blood so I went on the roller coaster. There I learned from the conversation of some people in front of me that Margaret Murray, Santana Palano, and Rita Reagan had just smashed all women's airplane speed records by attaining the speed of nine hundred miles an hour. Nor did the accomplishments of the women's champions end here. Estelle Selkowitz and Lucy Croughwell had sailed beneath the north pole in a submarine and had proved that there was really no land there.

Deeply absorbed by my eavesdropping, I did not realize my ride on the coaster was over until William Oleksyn, the ticket collector, asked me for my ticket for the next ride. I, of course, was without another; but just then Francis Sacchetti, who was now a well-known banker came to my rescue and gave me a ticket so that I was not forced to leave until I had had a second ride.

Following this, I decided it was time to return to Enchanted Island, get my children, and return home. On my way I met Doris Gilbert and Ida Gunthner who had just been elected senators from Massachusetts and New York.

Finally, I reached my destination. Louise Robbins, Superintendent of Nurses, sent someone to bring in my children. He returned followed by Margaret Schilling, who had charge of Steve; Mary Haskins who was caring for Charles; Carol Hayward who was minding Junior; and Ruth Dennison with little Mary Jane.

I hustled the children into my rocket plane and we were soon on our way home. The great event was over, I had seen the World's Fair.

CLASS ACTIVITIES

THE JUNIOR PROM

At last came the day of the Junior Prom, June 19, 1933, which had been eagerly looked forward to by the faculty as well as the pupils with pleasant anticipation.

Work was begun in the early morning by a score of ambitious juniors who were determined to make the affair a success. From the side walls of the gymnasium were suspended six large baskets filled with beautiful purple and white irises with green pine boughs as backgrounds. At one end of the floor flanked by huge clumps of laurel stood a three-cornered golden moon with a blue background studded with silvery stars. Purple and yellow lights together with the purple numerals '33, '34, '35, and the letters P. H. S. illuminated with small white lights completed the decorations.

Because the juniors had been so faithful in paying their class dues, the House Committee was able to engage Bill Dehey and his popular orchestra to play for the occasion.

The reception committee consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Roy M. Strout, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Ford, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Goodwin, Miss Nellie J. Parker, Miss Rachel Morse, our Class Adviser, and others.

The Prom under the careful supervision of our Class Adviser, Miss Morse, and the efficient management of William Zarvis, General Chairman of the Prom, was, as a whole, a success both socially and financially.

SENIOR A ASSEMBLIES

With the approval of the school, the Senior A class originated a series of concerts for the purpose of furthering music appreciation among the students of Pittsfield High School. These concerts are a gift of the Senior A class to the undergraduates of the school. An Assembly Committee was chosen with Harold Feldman, Chairman, and immediately the first artist, Mr. Thomas King, was procured.

Mr. King was formerly a pupil of Hugo Kortschak, violin instructor at the South Mountain Music Colony, and had appeared as concert master with several symphony orchestras in this vicinity, the Albany Symphony Orchestra in particular. His program was varied, interesting, and contained many well known works. The selection on the program most appreciated was undoubtedly Mozart's famous "Rondo". Mr. King's artistry was recognized by the students, and the Senior A class were pleased with their choice of artist.

On June 1 the class presented the second in the series of its musical assemblies. This time the well-known Kingman-Bullock trio was presented. Those in the trio were Roscoe Kingman, violinist; William Kingman, cellist; and Irving Bullock, pianist. Their program consisted of movements from famous trios. The brilliant Gade's Trio, opus 42 met with most approval, but was followed by another almost as popular, namely Saint-Saen's Trio, opus 18. The interpretations of the trio were greatly appreciated by the students.

The Senior A class is grateful for the enjoyment and appreciation shown their concerts by the student body, and the class hopes to continue the concerts with the same hope of interest and enjoyment.

REVIEW OF "COME OUT OF THE KITCHEN"

(From Behind the Scenes)

One Who Lived Through It and Never Thought He Would

7.30 P. M. May 11, 1934—half an hour until curtain time for the Senior A play—I wonder how the make ups are coming? Great Guns! Louise looks like a singer in a nickelodeon . . . does that red stuff have to be put in the corners of one's eyes?—Jennie doesn't look too bad—from a distance. But give me a natural every time. So it goes; Joanne is next. She doesn't care for all that stove blacking that she has to have but she grits her teeth.—Oh, and can she take it?—7:45—well, how time flies!—Ye Gods! where are the telegrams for the first act? Pete! Elmer! Never mind, Elmer, I've found them. 7:50—final instructions from Miss Ward—please, at a time like this you want to know how much the broken decanter is going to cost! How do I know? "Seventeen dollars," shouts Elmer, helpful chap! I wish he weren't so interested in statistics; I see the profits going by way of the ash cans via the breakage item. 7:55—Ready?—heavens, there is somebody out there. The orchestra, at least.—Yes, I've been made up and I'm sweating blood. WILL THIS THING NEVER START? Dick Connors looks very much perturbed. Jenny is adamant, Sammie smiles as always. I pity those three; the curtain goes up on them.

What, Miss Ward? Get off the stage? Oh, yes to be sure. Ouch!! That stove—this place back here looks like the attic of a modernized country house.—Yes, I'm ready—there—there goes the curtain. There's no backing out now, there can't be any faltering. The first line. Do they like it? They have got to like it!

The story? It's a great one. A. E. Thomas wrote it. He got the idea from Alice Duer Miller's successful novel of the same name. It revolves around a Virginia family by the name of Dangerfield, who, finding themselves temporarily embarrassed as regards their pocketbooks, decide to rent their home to a rich Yankee (Dud Head, and doesn't he look like a Morgan?) One condition of the lease stipulates (mournfully announced by Dick Stevenson) that a staff of white servants should be engaged for his sojourn at the stately home. The servant question presents practically insurmountable difficulties until one of the daughters of the family conceives the mad idea that she (lovely Lou Robbins) her sister (explosive Jenny Pasek) and two brothers (cute Sammie Rue and debonair Dick Connors) shall act as the domestic staff.

Olivia Dangerfield adopts the name of Jane Ellen, and presides over the destinies of the kitchen (painted a beautiful Miss Kaliher blue by Elmer Lombard and his hard working stage crew.) Elizabeth Dangerfield is appointed house maid. Paul, the elder brother, becomes the butler and Charles, the younger, is pressed into service as the bootboy. When Burton Crane arrives from the North, accompanied by Mrs. Falkener (Chris Manley who put everything she had into the part and was outstanding in the role) her daughter, (Carol Hayward—charming, my dears) and Crane's attorney, Solon Tucker (Harold Feldman, and there never was a more convincing lawyer) find the staff of servants to possess so many methods of behavior out of the ordinary that amusing complications arise immediately. Olivia's charm and beauty impress Crane above everything else, and the merry story continues through a maze of delightful incidents including handsome Bruce Burnham's love affair with Carol, and Joanne Decker and her cablegrams, until the identity of the heroine is finally disclosed. The climax is not reached, however, until Crane has professed his love for his charming cook, and a happy ending is assured.

A great measure of gratitude is due Miss Ward for her successful coaching of the production which assured a happy evening for both the audience and the cast.

CLASS SONG

Tune: "The Champagne Waltz"

Sweet memories appear
Of comrades so sincere,
As fate does wend its way
Ending our High School day.
Deep in the flaming West
Eternal friendships rest;
Though we need them
We leave them
The banners to fly
For old Pittsfield High.

With faith and hope in view
We must begin anew
To face life's challenge sharp,
Sturdy and strong of heart.
Our only goal, success
Which we will reach with zest.
To the near ones
And dear ones
We now say, "Goodbye".
Here at Pittsfield High.

CLASS WILL

BEING of sound mind and body, we, the June Class of 1934, do hereby give and bequeath the following:

1. To the Carmel Sisters and Miss Daly—The ability to sing like the Pickens Sisters.
2. To Miss McSweeney—Anchors for those wandering desks.
3. To Miss McCormick—A class that can appreciate the aesthetic things in life.
4. To Mr. Joyce—Dudley Head's ability to act as Clark Gable.
5. To the Janitors—A chair that may be attached to the gasoline lawn-mower that they might no longer have to exert themselves by walking along behind it.
6. To Miss Murphy—A class that won't become the least bit embarrassed the first time they are "deared."
7. To Miss Ward—If she thinks she can ever find a cast as wonderful as ours—the hope that they will do as well.
8. To the Sophomores—Stanley Carpenter's brains to be divided equally among them.
9. To Mr. W. D. Goodwin—A "good and new Joke-Book" with jokes that haven't had to stand the test of time.
10. To Miss Millet—A class as willing and cooperative as the present Senior A Class.
11. To Miss Kaliher—A pen that will make only "1's"—but "woe is you" she will be sure to find a way to make "1's" mean failures.
12. To Miss Hodges—A telephone that she can reach.
13. To Mr. Meehan—A study hall—a home room—library and classroom of nice girls that won't talk and boys who will listen and believe his profound theories.
14. To Mr. Herrick—A second period study hall in 102—as prodigious, colossal, stupendous, gigantic and tremendous as the present 2nd period.
15. To Mr. Innis—A class that will pronounce "on," "en," "un," "an," "ou" and "in" as well as his present senior class.
16. To Mr. Strout—A unextinguishable and non-detachable distributor.
17. To Miss Prediger—A week without any Fridays.
18. To Miss Casey—A student who will come to school in a boat—chewing gum.
19. To Mr. Conroy—A class of pupils that won't talk more than any other class in the building.
20. To Miss Kennedy—A study hall of pupils with rubber soled shoes.
21. To Mr. Ford—Students who won't loiter in the halls—or even want to.
22. To Mr. Leahy—A laboratory so complete that he won't have to borrow from Mr. Lynch.
23. To A. P. Goodwin—A gavel with which to pound the desk in his angrier moments.
24. To the School—A sum of money with which to buy some "popeye" films—to be run for the education of the students.

Sealed, signed and sworn on this 13th (thirteenth) day of June, 1934 (One thousand nine hundred and thirty-four).

WITNESSES:

We don't have any—We don't "deem" it necessary.

SCHOOL ACTIVITIES

DEBATING CLUB

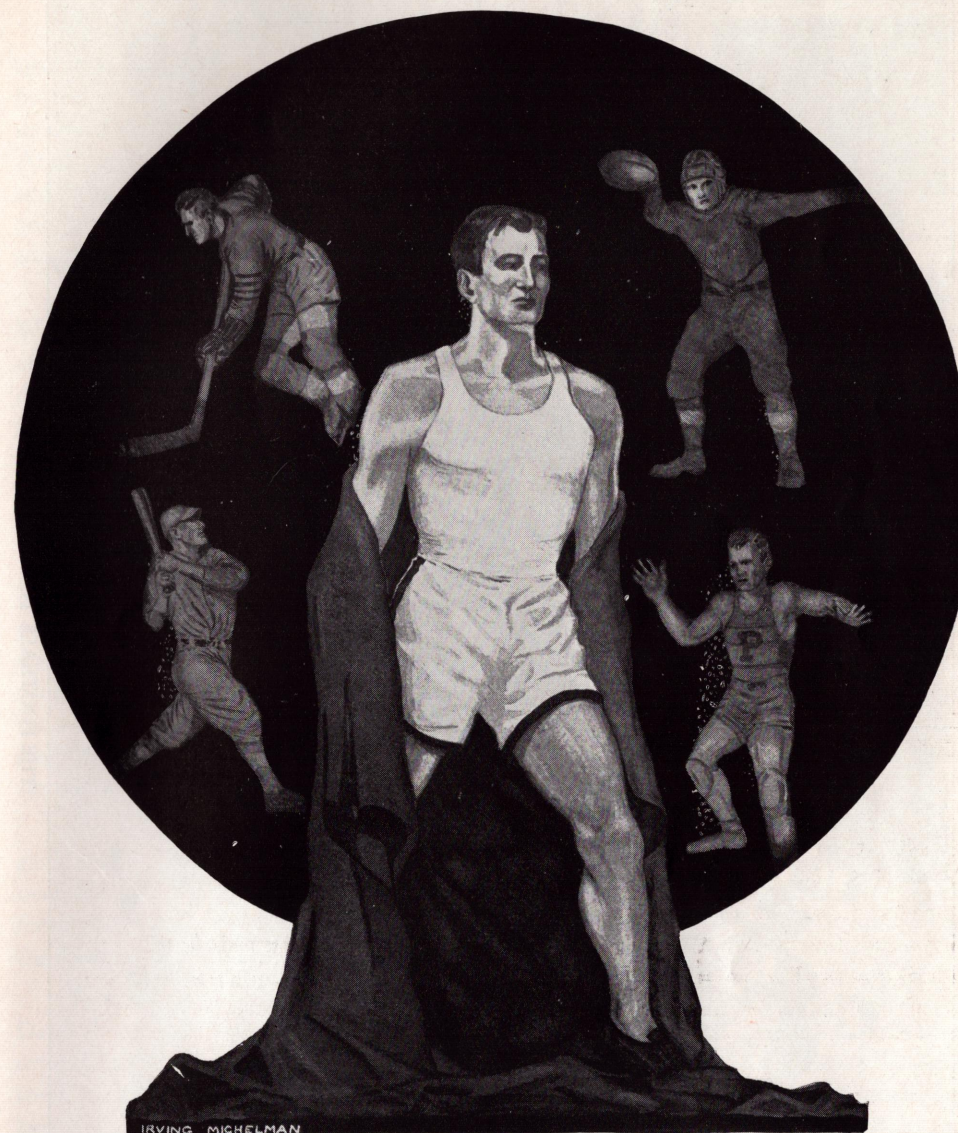

AS the school year draws to a close, our attention is, without question, turned to the successful activities of our superb Debating Club. Under the unsurpassed leadership of President Bruce Burnham, Vice President Harold Feldman, Secretary Marjorie Cummings, with Mr. Lynch as coach, the forensic society has just completed one of its most successful seasons. Their weekly Wednesday meetings never lacked for interest and enthusiasm on the part of the members. Preparation for the public debate, held in our auditorium on April 11th, was started exceptionally early this year, and many hours of tedious work was necessary—such arduous tasks as poring over huge, musty volumes, compiling vital statistics, and delving into newspapers, yellowed with age—before the speeches were finally completed.

The result is known to all P. H. S. students. On April 11th the affirmative team, composed of Bruce Burnham, captain; Martin Keegan, Marjorie Cummings, with Richard Burdick as alternate, entertained the negative team of Adams High School on the question, Resolved: That legislation should be enacted for the federal control of motor transport. By remarkably brilliant speeches, our team overcame their opponents and carried off the honors with a judge's decision of 3 to 0. In like manner at Williamstown our inexperienced negative team of Daniel Secunda, William McEachron, Charles Kline, with John Tobey as alternate acquitted themselves like veterans and returned home as victors. Certainly this year has been a banner one for the forensic club, and without doubt next year will be just as successful. Officers for the coming season are William McEachron, President; Martin Keegan, Vice President, and Richard Burdick, Secretary—each one a tried and experienced debater, a veteran who will fight unceasingly for the glory of P. H. S.

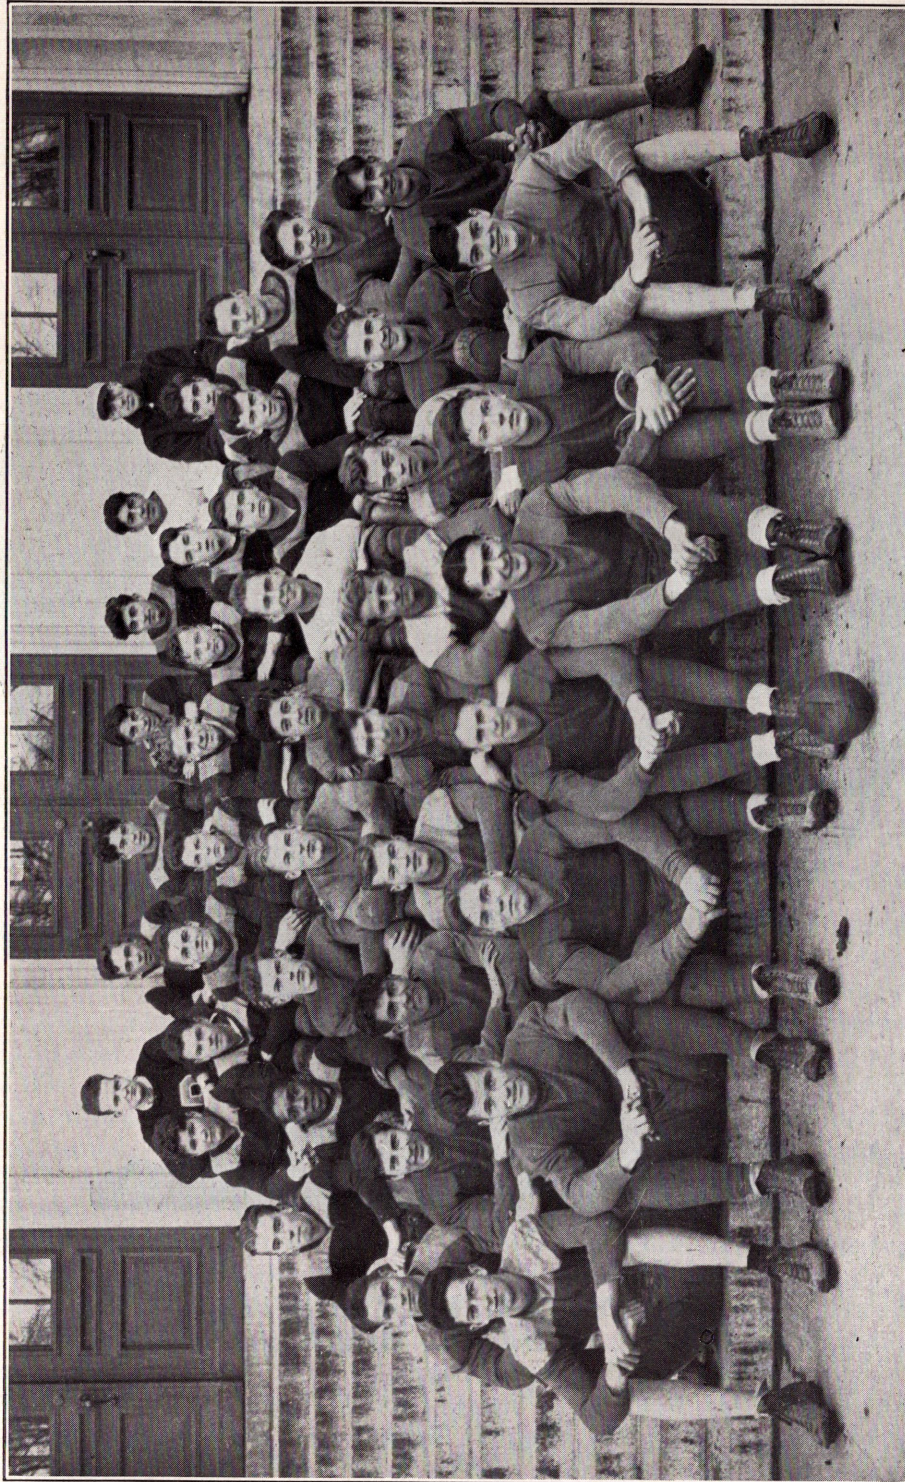

ORATORY

AMONG the eighteen hundred students who are endeavoring to secure an education at P. H. S., there are eight or ten brilliant orators—young men who we know will make a name for themselves within the next few years. We have discovered this amazing, stupendous bit of news by merely listening to the annual oratorical contest held this winter in our auditorium. The fervid, inspiring words of these young speakers are still ringing in our ears. Out of the eight budding orators who spoke—Bruce Burnham, Irving Michelman, Harold Feldman, Marjorie Cummings, Victor Olsen, Charles Kline, Richard Burdick, and Daniel Secunda—Harold Feldman was awarded first place with his excellent speech in "The World Community—A Challenge to Youth." Certainly, after hearing Mr. Feldman speak, we could not but feel that we, as youths, must do our best to answer the challenge. By virtue of this victory Mr. Feldman was sent to Springfield to compete in the contest conducted by the Springfield Republican for the schools of Western Massachusetts. Out of the many able orations that were delivered that night the speech of our orator captivated his listeners, and he was one of those chosen to receive a trip to Washington, D. C., with all expenses paid. Mr. Feldman has won one prize and we hope this will mark the beginning of a long series of triumphs for him. Though we grieve that he is numbered among this year's graduates, yet we know that his example will spur on the efforts of the speakers who will return in the fall. May P. H. S. continue to be successful in the field of oratory and may next year be just as triumphful as this!

ATHLETICS

FOOTBALL

On October 7, 1933 Pittsfield High's gridiron warriors opened a successful season against Poughkeepsie High. Poughkeepsie entered the Common with a rugged and much heavier team than Pittsfield. Despite this disadvantage, Coach Stewart's charges marched up and down the field with an offensive that sadly weakened within the twenty-yard line. After one of these offensives, Quarterback Gull called for a drop-kick which was blocked and picked up by Relyea. This Poughkeepsie spark plug raced the length of the field for the only score of the game. This 7-0 was no disgrace. Pittsfield displayed an impregnable line and a smart backfield.

P. H. S. broke into the win column on October 20 when it tagged a 13-6 defeat on Worcester Classical on the Common. This game was replete with thrills due to the opening of an aerial attack by both elevens. The Pittsfield line stood out with its customary tight defense. With Captain Kellar, Phelan and Simmons opening holes, the P. H. S. backs waltzed forty yards to a touchdown in the second period. A fighting Classical eleven immediately loosed a barrage of passes that produced a score. The pass was also instrumental in Pittsfield's final score, the ball being carried to the six-yard line by the elevated route. From there three plunges placed the pigskin beyond the last chalk-mark. Final score, 13-6.

On October 20, P. H. S. met Adams High in a struggle brimming over with thrills, both offensively and defensively. In the first quarter Pittsfield High showed real offensive power as they dove down the field to the Adams six-yard line. Here Adams stiffened and, with the aid of a fifteen-yard penalty, held for downs. This was the only time during the conflict that the Adams line was dented to any appreciable extent. For the most part of the second half, the boys from North Berkshire had the Purple and White defense struggling mightily in the shadow of the goal posts. However, Adams was unable to push a score across and the score board read 0-0 at the end of the game.

On November 4, P. H. S. journeyed to North Adams and there took a hard fought game from a stubborn Drury eleven by the score of 7-0. The Stewart men rambled with ease over the gridiron until they neared Drury's goal. Here, the North Berkshire defense stiffened and on eight occasions held for downs. Only once was Pittsfield able to break through the forward wall of the boys from the north and score.

Pittsfield High gridsters lost a hard fought game to Williamstown 6-2, on Armistice Day. A snow-covered field made the going underfoot very treacherous and also caused several fumbles. In the second period, a long pass, Bunoski to Vandersloot, gave Williams-town their lone tally. Pittsfield High scored its two points in the third period when Captain Kellar dropped Perry behind his goal. Despite the absence of Gull and Mahauski, regular backs, Pittsfield put up a great game and with any breaks would have won.

On Thanksgiving morning Pittsfield High and its ancient rival, Saint Joseph's High, met in their annual Turkey-Day tilt. The first period ended with a determined P. H. S. line pushing a fighting St. Joseph's wall back. As the whistle blew, Mahouski carried the ball to the parochial six-inch line. On the first play of the second quarter, Mahauski crashed over for the only score of the game. There was no further scoring and the game ended 7-0. However, it was later found that Tommy Kasherovich, P. H. S. tackle, was born a year earlier than he suspected. As a result, the game, which would have meant Pittsfield's tenth city series, was forfeited to Saint Joseph's.

TRACK

The Pittsfield High Track Team enjoyed a very favorable season. In the first contest, a dual meet with Berkshire School on May 12, 1934, the P. H. S. harriers lost 74-26. Hill and Michelman captured firsts, Ryan, Foote and Evans, seconds with Mahauski, Hagstrom, Turland, and Dominick scoring thirds.

On Memorial Day, the P. H. S. Track Team placed third behind West Springfield High and Westfield in the Western Massachusetts Championships staged at Wilbraham. Zarvis and Michelman took firsts in the low hurdles and high jump respectively, each breaking the meet record. Captain Ryan in the mile and Hill in the broad jump had to be content with second places. Evans placed third in the 440. The P. H. S. relay team, composed of Coradeschi, Zarvis, Holden and Dominick, running in that order, also won their event.

On June 2, P. H. S. journeyed to Williams College to participate in the Berkshire County Track Meet. Displaying an evenly balanced squad, Coach Carmody's boys garnered 44 points to cop the meet. Foote in the half-mile, Evans in the 440, Michelman in the high jump and Hill in the broad captured their events with the last three mentioned breaking the existing record for the meet. In the weights, Mahauski and Balmer putted the shot well enough to place second and third respectively. Balmer also hurled the discus for a second place. Captain Ryan placed second in the mile while his running mate, Hagstrom came in fourth. In the half-mile, Turland and Shelton came in third and fourth respectively. The relay team, consisting of Coradeschi, Gross, Kidney and Dominick placed first. Others who came in fourth to place were Dominick in the 100, Gross in the 220, Sloper in the high jump and Bachezewski in the pole vault.

HOCKEY

Pittsfield High wins another laurel—for a most successful season in hockey—the world's fastest sport. In the course of the season, Coach Beardsley's charges played many fast teams, losing only two games. The worst defeat of the season suffered by the P. H. S. pucksters was at the hands of Albany Academy, the smooth functioning Empire State boys taking our combine to the tune of 5 to 1.

In a three game series with the Lebanon School the Pittsfield sextet won the first game, lost the second, and won the third, with it, the series.

The only game played with the Lenox School resulted in a 1 to 1 deadlock.

The P. H. S. skaters battled to another 1 to 1 tie with the crack Holyoke team. The boys from the Papertown are considered the best in Western Massachusetts, and it was a feather in our bonnet to battle them on even terms. At that time, an invitation was expected to the State Hockey Tournament, but none was forthcoming. This was too bad, for the Purple and White would have gone a long way in that tournament.

The entire sextet, with Simmons, goalie; Rue and Freeman in the defense, Captain Ritchie at center, and Head and Rice in the forward wall, is worthy of much praise, with special mention going to Ken Ritchie and Tiny Simmons for brilliant work throughout the season.

GIRLS' SPORTS

On reviewing the athletic record of the 1934 graduating class, we find the girls are sadly lacking in muscular ability. They tend towards heights which can only be gained by brains. Brains! Oh! But come, this is a sport column, not a study of the cranium.

She who heads the list of the all-round athlete girls has the distinctive "handle" of Peggy Madden. She indulges in track, basketball, and in between times she "trips it on a light, fantastic toe" in the way of tap, folk or ballroom dancing. Small in stature, sturdy of figure, and beaming of face, she has played her way through her high school career with grand sportsmanship.

In the dim past years when the weather was warmer than 20° below zero, thus permitting the more delicate sex to weather it and play hockey, Dorothy Brigham, Carol Hayward and Irene Maloney participated in this brisk sport.

For the indoor girl basketball brought out the healthy flush. Jane Sclater, Kathryne Cushing and others spent their afternoons wiping up the gym floor.

Louise Robbins did some tennis playing, and although she never became a champion, her form was beautiful. Is it still?

This ends the rather feeble list of would-be Atlantas, save for the estimable swimming prowess of the authoress. This earnest young female did her best, but her best proved to be a fall in the pool at the wrong time during a relay race, and the rest is better left unsaid. I fear there are no future Wards and McLaughlins among our number, but we tried.
